This course is aimed at any learner who wants to communicate. The speakers, lesson by lesson, use Standard Modern Arabic to communicate in daily life situations. Ash-Shallal corresponds to B1, according to the Common European Framework of Reference Levels. It provides over 200 hours of school lessons; apart from a minimum of 150 of students' self-learning (practice and revision). As our main goal is natural communication, the starting point in every unit is listening. It is hoped that students say what is previously listened to, and they write what is firstly read. That is to say, listening leads to speaking and reading enables writing. The student listens and learns new vocabulary by ear (that is the reason why the listening scripts are not printed on the main corpus of the lessons). Afterward, students speak to practise the new language. Then, they read and so they can see the taught lexis in written words. And, finally, they write what they have already learnt to say and read.
